What Are VERTICAL Blinds?

Vertical blinds consist of vertical slats and can come in a variety of materials depending on your choice. Popular and common materials are PVC, fabric, faux wood and metal. Each slat is attached to a runner above the window and then they usually hang down to either the windowsill or the floor if you have full length windows. Slat are linked together by a cord or chain and by pulling on these cords you can open or close the blinds accordingly, as well as having the option of adjusting their angle to allow more light into the room by twisting an acrylic pole. Of course, you can also shut them completely for total privacy should you require it, but vertical blinds are every bit as flexible as their Venetian counterparts.
